

CURRENT OPEN DESIGN PROJECTS FALL FAR SHORT OF THEIR SUSTAINABILITY PROMISES

P2P ECOLOGY

P2P MANUFACTURING

Current open design projects fall far short of their sustainability promises

🕒 September 12, 2013

💬 No Comment

👤 Michel Bauwens

📖 3 min read

Knowledge

Una analyse de Michel Bauwens de la P2P2 Foundation, sur les limites de l'Open pour l'écologie

Link to an online resource :

<https://blog.p2pfoundation.net/current-open-design-projects-fall-far-short-of-their-sustainability-promises/2013/09/12>

Language of your contribution : French Attached resources language : French

“There is no direct link between Open Design and the following environmental criteria: In this thesis, it is shown that promoting local production by users and easy assembly are the main potential of OD for the environment. Moreover, it is argued that these trends could be used in different phases of product lifecycle; by involving user in maintenance, repair, upgrade and reuse. In order to promote user involvement, information regarding all these phases has to be created and shared with the society.”